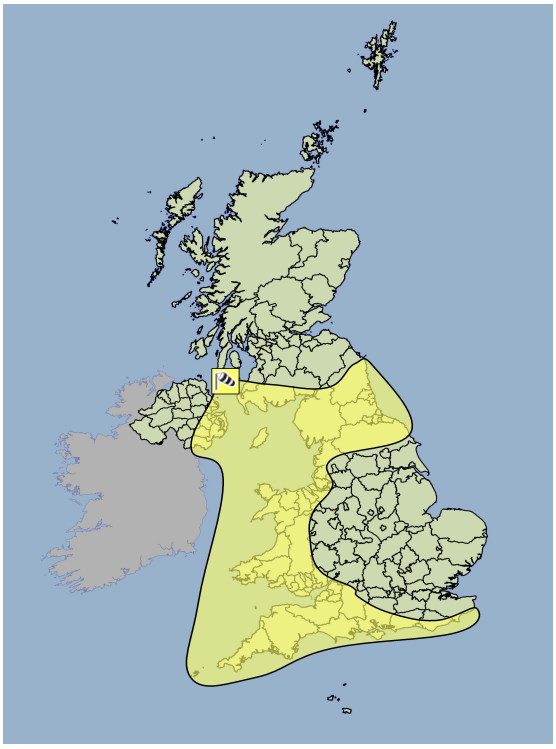
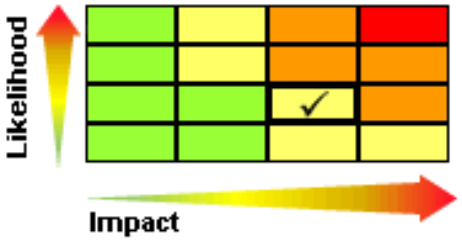
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A vigorous area of low pressure will run eastwards across Northern Ireland and southern Scotland on Saturday. Associated very strong winds together with bands of squally showers will affect many parts but particularly western areas. The combination of very strong winds, large waves and high tides will lead to hazardous conditions at times in some coastal areas. Winds will be easing somewhat by the early hours of Sunday.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 11:25 on Sat, 01st Feb 2014 until 03:00 on Sun, 02nd Feb 2014

Winds will continue to increase on Saturday, with gusts widely to 50 to 60 mph, and locally to around 70 mph on exposed coasts in the west. Additionally, large waves could lead to over-topping along some coastlines. The public should be aware of these hazards.

This is a further update to the warning issued earlier this week to include much of northeast England where winds will also be very strong for a time this evening.
